ABSTRACT

Patterns in student progression from application to acceptance and registration were analyzed for the fall semesters from 1975 to 1979 at six Hawaii community colleges. The data, compiled from the Coordinated Admissions Program Information System and from the Student Information System, indicate, with regard to applications, that: (1) a total of 12,487 applications were processed in 1979; of these, 8,420 were from students applying as first-time college students and 4,067 from transfer students; (2) this total did not differ greatly from previous semesters; (3) there were generally more female than male applicants; and (4) there were more applicants for vocational programs among new students and more for liberal arts programs among transfer students; in early years, there had been more liberal arts applicants in both groups. With regard to acceptances, the study revealed that 96% of the applicants were accepted in fall 1979--an increase over fall 1978. Acceptance rates ranged from 92% to 98% at the various campuses, and did not differ greatly by sex or by broad program areas. In previous years, acceptance rates for females and liberal arts applicants were higher. The data also reveal that the registration rates of those applicants that were accepted have declined steadily, from 75% in fall 1975 to 67% in fall 1979 for new students; and from 67% to 61% for transfer students. Tables provide data for the system as a whole and for each campus. (Author/AYC)

APPLICATIONS, ACCEPTANCES AND REGISTRATIONS

FALL 1979

This report summarizes data on student progression from application to acceptance and registration at six community colleges.* The data were retrieved from the Coordinated Admissions Program Information System (CAPIS) and from the Student Information System (SIS) and include data only on those applications which were processed by the registrars for regular credit students. (Data exclude applications submitted by early admittees and "other special" students.) The data are as of the October update.

Applications

The six community colleges processed a total of 12,487 applications this fall: 8,420 forms for students applying as new (first-time college) students and 4,067 forms for students applying as transfer students. These figures show a reduction of 177 (2 percent) compared to last fall for new students, but an increase of 347 (9 percent) for transfer students.

The data in Table 1 show that there were more new student applicants this fall at Honolulu and Windward community colleges; more transfer student applicants at all, except Kauai and Leeward community colleges.

There were generally more female applicants this fall. However, male applicants greatly outnumbered females at Honolulu while the reverse was true at Kapiolani. (Table 2)

There were more applicants for vocational programs among new students; more applicants for liberal arts program among transfer students. (Table 3) (Data for earlier years show that there were more applicants for the liberal arts program, generally, for both groups of students.)

The differing ratios of male/female, liberal arts/vocational applicants at the campuses reflect to a large extent the varying program offerings at the campuses.

Acceptances

The community colleges accepted 96 percent of the applicants this fall. Further examination shows that acceptance rates generally declined from Fall 1975 through Fall 1977 and increased in Fall 1978 and Fall 1979.

---

*Data on applicants to Hawaii Community College were not available for Fall 1979. Applicants to any of the three units at the University of Hawaii at Hilo (Hawaii Community College, Hilo College and the College of Agriculture) are now processed as applicants to UHH, rather than to individual colleges. See Appendices A-1 and A-2 for details on Hawaii CC for Fall 1975 through Fall 1978.

Office of the Chancellor for Community Colleges, Student Flow Reports 2, 7, 18 and 31, (1975-1977).

The Fall 1979 acceptance rates, by campus, for new student applicants ranged from 92 percent at Honolulu to 98 percent at Kapiolani and Leeward community colleges. For transfer students, the rates ranged from 93 percent at Honolulu to 99 percent at Windward. The acceptance pattern at Kapiolani shows declining rates of acceptance between 1975-1977 and substantially higher rates for the last two years.

The data in Tables 2 and 3 also show that acceptance rates this fall did not differ greatly by sex and by broad program areas. In contrast, the data for earlier years show higher acceptance rates for females and liberal arts applicants.

Registrations

The data in Table 1 show that the registration rates of those accepted have declined steadily, from 75 percent in Fall 1975 to 67 percent in Fall 1979 for new students; from 67 percent to 61 percent, for transfer students.

Data in Appendices B-1 - B-6 provide campus by campus details on total applicants (new and transfer), by majors, i.e., level 6. The information may be helpful to campus personnel in reviewing their admission practices and policies for the various programs and in determining the probable number of applicants who could be accepted into a program.

Summary

The total number of applications for admittance to the community colleges did not differ greatly this fall compared to previous semesters. While acceptance rates for both new and transfer applicants were the highest in five years, registration rates were the lowest. As suggested in the paragraph above, information such as this can be helpful in reviewing admission policies and practices.
